I joined Harrow Children's Service in early 2014 after many years of employment in another London Borough, it was time for a change.

I am glad that nearly two years down the line I made that choice and I remain happily an employee of the London Borough of Harrow.

I have found Harrow to have some very fine social workers and supportive managers who work collaboratively to promote the welfare and safeguarding of children.

So very often we hear about things that go wrong in the world of social work, but what I have seen and I able to testify to as a social work manager here in Harrow; is this: day in, and day out, there are dedicated social workers making a really positive difference to children's lives.

I am so very privileged to work in partnership with a diverse and talented workforce who are passionate about the work they do. There is never a dull day when undertaking the provision of a social work service for children and their families.

One every important facet of social work is the developing of relationships with the children and family members. I have seen how social workers with have been instrumental with supporting families to make positive changes to their own lives. I am so hearted by the commitment of social workers in ensuring that Harrow children are safe and have the opportunity to reach their potential.

Social workers undertake some of the most difficult jobs in the council with dedication and a real determination to transform children's lives for the better.

I would urge other social workers with the same mindset to join us in the making a changes that will be for the better of the children now and in the future.
